ENGLISH LANGUAGE

Directions (81 - 86) : Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions given. Certain words/phrases have been given in bold to help you locate them while answering some of the questions :

Whether because of the emphasis of traditional religious sanctification of the personal soul or for some other reason, there is a tendency, to restrict the ultimate scope of morals to the reflex effect of conduct on one's self. Even utilitarianism, with all its seeming independence of traditional theology and its emphasis upon the general good as the criterion for judging conduct, inherited its hedonistic psychology of "private pleasure" as the motive for action. The idea that the stable and expanding institution of all things that make life worthwhile throughout all human relationships is the real object of all intelligent conduct is depressed from view by the current conception of morals as a special kind of action chiefly concerned with either the virtuous or the enjoyments of individuals in their personal capacities. In changed form we still retain the notion of a division of activity into two kinds having very different worth's. The result is the depressed meaning that has come to be attached to the very meaning of the "practical" and the useful. Instead of being extended to cover all forms of action by means of which all the values of life are extended and rendered more secure, including the diffusion of the fine arts and the cultivation of taste, the processes of education and all activities which are concerned with rendering human relationships more significant and worthy, the meaning of "practical" is limited to matters of ease, comfort, riches, bodily security and police order, possibly health, etc., things which in their isolation from other goods can only lay claim to reserved and narrow values. In consequence, these subjects are handed over to technical sciences and arts. They are no concern of "higher" interests which feel that no matter what happens to inferior goods in the vicissitudes of natural existence, the highest values are immutable characters of the ultimately real.

Our depreciatory attitude towards "practice" would be modified if we habitually thought of it in its most liberal sense, and if we remembered our customary division between two separate kinds of value, one intrinsically higher and one inherently lower. We should regard practice as the only means (other than accident) by which whatever is judged to be honourable, admirable, approvable can be kept in concrete experiential existence. In this connection the entire import of "morals" would be transformed. How much of the tendency to ignore permanent objective consequences in differences made in natural and social relations, and how much of the emphasis upon personal and internal motives and dispositions irrespective of what they objectively produce and sustain, are products of the habitual depreciation of the worth of action in comparison with forms of mental processes, of thought and sentiment, which make objective difference in things themselves ?

81. Which of the following statements is/are correct in the context of the given passage ?

- There is a tendency to restrict the ultimate scope of morals to the reflex effect of conduct on one's self.
- Utilitarianism inherited its hedonistic psychology of 'private pleasure' as the motive for action.
- Our depreciatory attitude towards 'practice' would never be modified.

The recent discovery of molecular switches that help (111) whether stem cells will become muscle cells or other cell types might (112) the way for effective treatments of Muscular Dystrophy (MD). Stem cells - primitive, self-replacing cells that (113) bodily tissues - represent one of the most promising tools for replacing muscle fibres (muscle cells) lost or damaged in MD. Although perhaps best known as the (114) force behind embryonic development, stem cells are also found in adult tissues, where they can promote regeneration.

In the embryo and - to the recent surprise of scientists - in a (115) of adult tissues, many stem cells are pluripotent, meaning they are able (1121) give rise to several different cell types, including those that make up bone, blood, fat, nerve and muscle. If scientists can (1122) out how stem cells "choose" among these "career" options, they might be able to direct them to become specific cell types and repair specific tissues.

A team (1123) by MDA-funded scientist Michael Madhock at Canada's Ottawa Hospital Research Institute identified a chemical switch that influences the choice made by stem cells found in skeletal muscle. At switch is required (1129) the cells to become satellite cells, which, in adult skeletal muscle, increase muscle mass during normal growth, after exercise and in (1124) to muscle trauma (injury).
